My festival

Jennifer Tilly, actor and poker player

When I got off the plane in Nice, I felt like a major movie star. There were paparazzi and cameramen jostling to take pictures, screaming my name. You don't get that in LA, unless you're Posh Spice.

I've always wanted to come to Cannes, but only for a legitimate reason. So when [director] Mary McGuckian came up with the idea of setting her next movie in Cannes, I thought it would be so much fun. The film, Plus One, is about a bunch of film-makers running around trying to get the financing for their movie. I play Amber, one of those actresses who is famous for who she's slept with, what she wears and the kinds of parties she's been to.

We're staying on the outskirts of town, in a pretty cottage hotel. I have lots of party invitations, like Dennis Hopper's poker party, but I think I won't be going to many, since we wake up early and film until very late. If I have time, I'd like to spend an afternoon shopping and see the starlets lying topless on the beaches, with their perfect French breasts. We're going to the Hotel du Cap tomorrow to shoot, where I hear it's about 50 bucks for a cocktail.
